EAGER TO BUY TICKETS FOR ITALIAN OPERA. Chicago, Nov. 25 (Special).—Hundreds of people in stood in line at the box-office of the Auditorium this of morning, and patiently waited in the cold draughts and frosty breezes which whistled through the corridor of the building for an opportunity to buy season tickets to the Italian opera, which is to dedicate the building. As an illustration of the extraordinary demand for tickets, it may be stated that a small army of messenger boys and men, who stood with drowsy air and bilinking eyes outside the box-office this morning, had been there since Friday night. Nearly every ticket for the first week was sold to-day.

A PLAY BY THE VASSAR GIRLS.

new ships, he said, were good ships of their class and he hoped they were the beginning of a new Navy. The Navy needed more officers and men. As he looked around the present company he believed the prese-gang might be used to advantage. He believed in the necessity of a naval reserve and would ask me greater honor than to head it. Specches were made by Lieutenant-Governor Brackett and Mayor Hart. The Mayor and both branches of the city government visited the cruisers Chicago and Boston to-day as guests of their officers.

" GUS" M. L. SACKS PARALYZED.

Syracuse, N. Y., Nov. 25.-"Gus." M. L. Sacks. of New-York, who is well known as a patron of athletics, was suddenly paralyzed on the train near Rochester, while of his way home from Chicago. It is reported that Dr. Met-calf, a fellow passenger, pronounced his condition nearly hopeless. A telegram has been sent to his family in New-York, and they are expected to meet Mr. Sacks at Albany.

Mr. Sacks, who has earned an international reputation as a patron of athletic sports, is a member of the silk trimmings house of Sacks Brothers, No. 133 Greene-st., which was founded by his father, Morris Saels, about thirty-five years ago. He is forty years old, and during the last fifteen years has divided the management of the business with his brother, H. M. Sacks. For nearly twelve years he has been a leading member of the Manhattan Athletic Club, and at one time he filled the office of treasurer. He is also president of the Allerton Athletic Club, the National Cross-Country Association and the National Skating Association. During his connection with athletics he has given away many thousands of dollars in prizes. Some months ago he met with a serious fujury to his head, being thrown from his carriage while driving in Central Pack, and it is possible that this is indirectly the cause of his present illness. one time he filled the office of treasurer.

THE TRAMP LEAVES "THE OLD HOMESTEAD." Few of the people who saw "The Old Homestead" or Saturday and last night noticed any change in the cast, but there was a change. Walter Gale, who has been albut there was a change. Walter Gale, who has been a most as much identified with the part of "Happy Jack the tramp, as Mr. Thompson has with that of the ob-farmer, was not on the stage. Mr. Gale has been with Denman Thompson for fourteen years, and his absence from the company is naturally an occasion for remark. The reason that was given for it at the Academy of Musiciast night was that Mr. Gale had on a few occasions in the past been in a condition that prevented him from taking his part. At the beginning of the scason, it was said, Mr. Thompson told the actor that if this happened again he would be fined $50. It did happen again last week, and when pay-day came, on Saturday, the fine was imposed. This caused Mr. Gaie to stay away from the theatre on Saturday afternoon and against theatre on Saturday afternoon and evening.

Mr. Gale's version of the story, as given last night, is somewhat different. He says that about two weeks ago he oversiept one afternoon, and got to the theatre late. Mr. Thompson told him that he should fine him for it, and he did not take his part the next night, bee he was determined not to go back till he was sought. For these two nights he was fined, and one night last week he was sick and could not act, and was fined again, to the extent of $50. Mr. Gaie denied that he had ever been prevented from taking his part by intoxication.

SELECTIONS FROM THE MAIL.

MR. TOWNE RESTATES HIS VIEWS. ABOUT THE TIME AND MANNER OF COMMEMO. RATING THE DISCOVERY OF AMERICA.

To the Editor of The Tribune. Sir: Through some inadvertence your report of the losing session, on the 21st inst., of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers erroneously stated that a vote was passed dissenting from the suggestion ontained in my presidential address that further time s needed in which to prepare for the proposed International Exhibition. In your issue of yesterday you print a letter calling attention to this error and quoting verbatim the resolution referred to as follows:

Resolved, That the American Society of Mechanical Engineers cordially indorses and heartily urges the holding of the proposed great International Exhibition in this country in the near future to celebrate the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America."

The writer of the letter explained that the resolution was purposely made non-committal as to location and time, and closes with these words: "As the members present at the New-York meeting almost unanimously agree with Mr. Towne that 1892 is too early a date if the Fair is to be at all creditable from an architectural and artistic point of view." In writing the editorial in your issue of to-day, which relates to the subject Fair, the above letter and quotation were evidently overlooked, as you again make the statement that "In spite of Mr. Towne's arguments the society passed a resolution in favor of holding the Fair in 1892.7 Permit me to reliterate that the resolution above quoted is the only one passed at the meeting in question, and that not only was no action taken expressing preference for 1892, but that nearly all of the representative members of the society present at the meeting of last week expressed their entire co urrence in my views. The statement I made was not that we cannot erect buildings of the needed size by 1802, but that more time should be taken in order to give higher architectural and artistic quality to dildings and to all that relates to the adornment of the Exhibition. In rapidity of construction we doubt ess excel all other nations. The laying of bricks and driving of rivets may be done under high pressure without detriment to the work, but any attempt to ac amplish the work of design under pressure and with great rapidity, especially that part of it which relates to ornamentation, will previtably result in deterioration great rapidity, especially that part of it which relates to ornamentation, will inevitably result in deterioration of quality more than inversely proportionate to the haste with which such work is done. Our ability to erect great structures in the shortest possible time is unquestioned. My contention is that the coming opportunity should be utilized both as an occasion for should be utilized both as an occasion for should not be self-below that the coming opportunity should be utilized both as an occasion for should be best of which we are capable, for showing other nations that we have already minde substantial progress in this direction.

My succession in full was that a National celebration should be held on August 3, 1892, commemorative of the discovery by Columbus, at which time should be dedicated the statue or building intended to constitute the permanent memorial of that event, and that the industrial celebration should be opened on May 1, 1893. This would afford a whole year's additional time for preparation, would conserve the sentiment of the event and would avoid the occurrence of the Exhibition during the heated period of the Presidential campaign which is to take place in 1892.

CELEBRATING EVACUATION DAY.

THE OLD GUARD PARADES, BUT THE TWO VETERANS OF THE MEXICAN WAR SUR-RENDER TO THE WEATHER - BAN-NERS FOR THE NORMAL COLLEGE.

Evacuation Day dawned on New-York in gloom and rain; nor did the rain cease nor did the clouds break all the day long. But this was the traditional weather of the anniversary of November 25, 1783. And, bad cather or good weather, there will always be found patriots enough to mark the day by exercises significant of its institution. In the morning, Adjutant Gould Warner holsted the American flag on the flagstaff of the old fort at One hundred-and tenth-st. nd Seventh-ave. Adjutant Warner has now for twenty-two years performed this duty on the Fourth of July and on Evacuation Day. The City Hall flew the stars and stripes; and the day was remembered by the display of the loyal emblem in various parts of the city.

After the hoisting of the flag at the fort it was expected that General Abraham Dalley, of New-York, and Comrade Morris, of Westchester, the only veterans and took a train to the Battery. Two sections of the 2d Battery, First Brigade, National Guard of New-York, under command of a sergeant, were in the Park on the ancient Battery piers, in action-front oward the Bay, and received the veteran command with a National salute of forty-three gwns. The Old Guard formed in line, facing in the direction of the Statue of Liberty, and, after acknowledging the salute. remained at a present while the artillery limbered up and led the way up Broadway. The speech making began at half-past 9 o'clock, when the chair man, Colonel McLean, announced "The President of the United States." The response was by the band, which played "Hall to the Chief." The second toast who stead on the hank and uttered the screams which at tracted the officer's attention also said that McArinur had Sickles. The speaker addressed the soldiers in the McArthur was taken jolly humor of the mess table, and his audience tool to the Presbyterian Hospital. No one of the name which the gave could be found at No. 100 West Seventy-eighth-st., and, in a good-natured way, he was interrupted so often that the stern commander, Major McLean, finally McArthur was well dressed and apparently a man jumped up and in stentorian tones shouted: "If the privates of this command cannot remain silent they will leave the room." General Sickles at once remonstrated in the voice he used on the battle-field, as follows: "I object to such an order. If it is fulfilled, and I tolerate it, I shall be accused of favoring the early closing movement." (Laughter and applause.)

"I am one of those old-time Americans," he continued, " who celebrate the Fourth of July with noise and firecrackers. That the antagonism to Britain is dead is shown to me by the fact that our fashionable gentry go to Tuxedo and other such places and escape the Fourth of July. (Laughter.) Even our Aldermen have jumped on the Fourth of July, and inasmuch as most of jumped on the Fourth of July, and inasmich as most of them are from the Emerald Islo, of course there can be no charge of partiality." (Laughier.)

In the rest of his speech General Sickles referred to the birth of the new republic of lirazil, and the reference was received with prolonged cheers.

Commander Newall, of the United States Navy, responded to "The Navy," but confined his remarks to explaining that in such august company he could only per case.

refer to the unfortunate sailor who was called before the mast, and addressed by an officer in these words: "Silence, when you speak to an officer!" This the Commander thought was enough to keep him quiet. He was vociferously cheered, as were the other speakers, whose toasts were: "The Metropolis," Controller Myers; "The Senior Officers," Colonel Winchester and Colonel Ward; "The Press," Joseph Howard, jr. "The Union" was responded to by the orchestra with "The Star Spangled Banner," and Augustus Foster read a capital poem by George Hoey, introducing the names of all the prominent guardsmen.

GLANCES HERE AND THERE. As regularly as the million-stamp mania breaks out the crazy notion that the owners of the largest and most costly steamers affoat are insanely bent on reckless racing." Put a damp towel around your head for a moment, you poor dear, and try to think calmly, or as calmly as you can. First, these big steamers are, as a rule, either uninsured or but partially insured. Then their success depends mainly on safety, and, as a consequence, upon an earned and established reputation for safety, hard to gain and easy, very easy, to lose. Their captains and officers are the most expert, the most experienced and the most careful to be found. They are all temperate men and many if not most of them are total abstainers when at sea. Not only does the captain carry his life in his hand every minute of every hour, and with and Comrade Morris, of Westchester, the only veterans of the War of 1512 in rish reighborhood, would go to Millary Hall, at No. 103 Howery, where they would not offer the means whereby he and his wife and children to Millary Hall, at No. 103 Howery, where they would result in the case in the c t the means whereby he and his wife and children

I o'clock, marched to the Sixth-ave, elevated road far more severe, in fact far too severe. Yet there are more people employed. Of course in some departments, like the Post Office, for instance, this is largely because the country has grown in wealth and population; others, such as the Pension and Currency Bureaus, practically owe their existence to the war. But take the War Department, for example. Each bureau is about as big as the whole Department was before the war. Some are bigger. Allow for the work of the war, grant that the army has doubled since 1840, which it hasn't; required, to explain why the elerical force in the Secretary's office has been multiplied by eight. The Civil service Commissioners might substitute that question in their next examination for the usual craving for information as to what five principal rivers flow into the Caspian Sea, or what is the nature and composition of elkonogen, if they do, and you are asked, and you really want a chance to copy little red ink indorsements into a book so big that it hurts your stomach, answer boldly the Bell Punch. Multiplied checks. Men nothing, forms everything. largely because the country has grown in wealth and

In "The Exiles" there is a scene where two sledges are drawn down and across the stage, the first by a reindeer, the second by four dogs. The angle at the turn is exceedingly sharp. A few nights ago when the sledges appeared, the first one made the turn safely and went merrily off the stage. The dogs, to make the turn, and they suddenly steered off toward the footlights. There is a curtain-drop at this point and the curtain came rolling down as usual. It divided the sledging party in an unceremonious way and for a moment there was a struggling confused mass of curtain, sledge, does, furs and riders which might have done justice to a genuine upset in a siberian snow-drift. however, were unable to come around sharply enough

So: Madame Diss, again. By the way did you were notice that in all these wonder-working mysteries of the money-bleeder be a man, the wonder-worker is are to be a woman? And the other way 'round, as well. Account for it as you like, there the fact is.

The python is dead. It was time for him to die.

After escaping from the hold of his steamer, being borne across the City Hall Park on two men's shoulders like a fire hose, going nto winter quarters in a furnace fine in Boston, and crawling deliberately from Nahant to Jamaica Plain order to terrify a respectable lady who had never hat med him or even spoken disrespectfully of him, that python ought to have died. An Irishman casually hashed him up and took him into a restaurant in Park Row for sale. But they were not buying that kind just then. So ends the sad tale of the python. Let us have peace.

DEATH OF STEPHEN CROWELL.

Stephen Crowell, one of the oldest and best known surance men in New-York and Brooklyn, died yesterlay at his home, No. 3 East Twelfth-st., after a short iness. On Wednesday last Mr. Crowell attended a ceting of the Board of Fire Underwriters, held in the Mutual Life Building. In descending the vestibul steps on his way out he slipped and fell head foremost to the sidewalk, sustaining concussion of the brain He was removed to his home, and never wholly regained consciousness.

He was born at Mansfield, Conn., in 1810, and was the son of Asa Crowell, being the oldest of a family of nine. When eighteen years old he came to seel his fortune in New York. He settled in Bro and tried several callings, being at one time connected, as an agent, with many of the older insurance companies. About 1840 he became manager of the Brooklyn Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, and succeeded in winning a wide popularity The great Brooklyn fire in 1848 suggested to him the formation of a large insurance company, and after nearly five years of hard work he succeeded in start-ing the present Phents Fire Insurance Company, of Brooklyn, of which he was first president. Mr. Crowell retained his position of president for thirty-nive years, and then in 1888, on his retirement through old age, he was unanimously elected chalman of the live years, and then in 1888, on his revirement for thirty old age, he was unanimously elected chairman of the floard of Directors. He was married in 1842 to floar the floar of the floar

PRESENTATION OF A CENTENNIAL BANNER. The Operative Plasterers' Union held last night in Tammany Hall its annual ball and entertainment, which was made more than usually interesting by the presentation by General Daniel Butterfield of the Centennial banner awarded to the Plasterers' Union for the best banner awarded to the Plasterers' Union for the best showing in the Centennial industrial parade. General Butterfield made the presentation speech and alluded to the handsome showing made by the plasterers. Upon one she of the banner was inscribed: "Awarded to the Operative Plasterers' Society for fine bearing in the civic and Industrial parade, N. Y. C., May 1, 1880," and on the other side: "Centennial Colorration of the Inauguration of Washington the first President, 1789-1880," Judge Fitzgerald made the address.

A FOOTBALL GAME FORECAST. From Saturday's Hartford Courant.

From Saturday's Hartford Courant.

A real good story was told by a Yale man in this city yesterday. He came from New Haven yesterday and the boys there are of course all agog over the football game in Springfield to day between Yale and Hartari. Two youths who especially wished for rassons of their own to know which side was going to win determined to consult a spiritualistic medium. So they sought out a clairvoyant. The one they went to was a female of rather doubful years. After paying their dollar like little men they put the question bodily: "Who will win the football game Saturday between Yale and Harvard!" After a great delay the answer came, and it must have relieved their awful suspense. It was: "A great university will win the game."

The Buckingham Hotel, on Fifth Avenue, New-York, is deservedly popular with the travelling public, on account of its admirable situation, perfect sanitary ap pointments. Iuxurious and comfortable furnishing, a-well as its unrivalled restaurant and reasonable charges. It offers all the comforts of a home, without any of the cares and annoyances of housekeeping.—(Boston Home Journal.
